Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Most Beautiful City in America: Essay and Plan the Improvement City of Boston The importance to a city of sufficient room in its streets to transport all the freight and merchandise which comes by cars or vessels, cannot be over-estimated. Boston is using every effort to enlarge her business, although, even now, a balky horse or an overturned coal-cart, in one of her narrow streets, can arrest the business of the city until the obstruction is removed; and by that delay cause men to break important engagements, travellers to lose the cars or steamboats, and create general inconvenience for the whole business community. Last summer, it is said that fifteen miles of freight cars were waiting at one time to be unloaded, and this winter our railroads have been obliged to refuse or hold back western freight because of our inability to handle and store it. These facts cannot be ignored; and if the city is too small or inconvenient for the present business, what will she do with the increase that must follow new railroads and canals, and new investments of energy and capital? Mathematics teach us that what is true of a part of any body is true of its whole; and this we can apply to the domestic and business wants of a growing city, as well as to men s private affairs. If a farmer s barn cannot hold his crops he builds larger and better. Manufacturers extend their mills and warehouses to meet the increasing demands of their business. Merchants plan roads and railroads, build wharves and ships, and try in all legitimate ways to increase their opportunities for...
